MICROFIBER

What's the microfiber?

Microfiber is a polyester and nylon (polyamide) fiber that is used to make fabric. The fiber is 1.0 denier or smaller, and it's split many times smaller than a human hair. The increased surface area of the fibers and their star shape also allow them to absorb up to 7 to 8 times their weight in liquid. The fibers generate a static electric charge when moved across a surface that attracts dust and contains it, rather than spreading it around or releasing it into the air when dry dusting, so microfiber fabric is primarily used in household cleaning because of its strong cleaning ability and durable nature.
